Summary

The meeting began with public comments from families of inmates who died in custody at San Diego County facilities expressing dissatisfaction with how the cases were handled and raising concerns including improper cell checks, drugs entering facilities, and medical negligence and lack of mental health support. The meeting also included a presentation by Captain Derek Williamson on the Sheriff's Department's ADA compliance unit, which highlighted efforts to improve accommodations for inmates with disabilities. The new CLERB Executive Officer, Brett Kalina, was also introduced to the Board during the meeting. Some concern was raised by members of the public that the community had not been involved more in the hiring process.

Here's what you need to know

- Numerous family members of individuals who died in custody at San Diego County facilities spoke about their dissatisfaction with how the cases had been handled and called on CLERB to provide stronger oversight and promote transparency and accountability.
- Brett Kalina, the new CLERB Executive Officer was introduced to the Board and officially began work in the role.
- Chair MarryAnne Pintar said that Sheriff Kelly Martinez had agreed to attend a

CLERB meeting in the fall, something members of the public have been requesting.

Immediate Actions

- None

Accessibility Issues

- Diedre McLeod said that she prefers to submit written public comments due to a disability and that she had trouble getting them read into the record at several meetings.

Follow-Up Questions

- What was the hiring process for the new CLERB Executive Officer? How much community input was there?
- How accessible/available is information of in-custody deaths in San Diego County facilities? What data is kept?
- What are actions that CLERB could take to better address community concerns?
